

Maple Street gives relief to Louisiana credit unions

Vendor relationship management company calls for others to do the same

ORLANDO, FLORIDA, UNITED STATES, September 14, 2021 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- When your community has been slammed by a major category four hurricane, you should be able to focus on rebuilding and helping out your neighbors – any extra resources could make all the difference.

For nearly 20 years, Maple Street has been fighting to empower credit unions and community banks to thrive. In light of the tragic Hurricane Ida, the vendor relationship company will suspend billing for its clients residing in Louisiana – the region hit hardest by the storm – for six months.

This is a call for everyone in our industry to offer support to keep these vital institutions afloat and allow them to support their communities. We hope all vendors will take up this challenge”

*Mike Crofts, Maple Street
President*

Maple Street is also encouraging other vendors in the industry to do the same.

Mike Crofts, president of Maple Street, explains, "Our friends in Louisiana need our help. It's the local credit unions and community banks that will help rebuild the storm-ravaged areas and we need to do everything we can to ensure they succeed. By waiving their bills for the next six months, they'll be able to have additional resources to provide immediate help to their employees and community members.”

Crofts continued, "This is not about us. This is a call for everyone in our industry to offer support in order to keep these vital institutions afloat and allow them to support their communities. We hope all the vendors in our industry will take up this challenge.”
