cancer experiences. Dignitana is featuring Agostino's personal profile on the company's social media channels during the month of September.

Now in its fifth year, the “DigniCap” Dignitary program is an ever-expanding group of individuals who have used The “DigniCap” Scalp Cooling System to reduce chemotherapy-induced hair loss associated with their prescribed cancer treatment. DigniCap Dignitaries share their personal stories, offer support to others and provide updates on the latest technology and reimbursement options to cancer patients nationwide.

As a production designer for a new primetime television program, Ms. Agostino told very few colleagues about her diagnosis when she first learned she had cancer. Concerned that colleagues would think she was too sick to do her job, she barely missed a day of work during six rounds of chemotherapy.

“I love my work,” Agostino said, “And it was important to me to help get this new show off the ground. DigniCap really helped me do that.”

Receiving a cancer diagnosis can be a devastating experience, and studies show that for many, the prospect of hair loss from chemotherapy can be equally terrifying. Fortunately, more than 250 cancer centers in 38 states across the U.S. now offer their patients DigniCap, a treatment that greatly reduces chemotherapy-induced hair loss.

"My hair is so much a part of who I am," Agostino said. "This treatment can help so many people. It helped me keep a positive mindset the whole time, and there's no way that would have been possible for me without keeping my hair."

"Maintaining a level of privacy and control is critically important to someone who has just been diagnosed with cancer," said William Cronin, Chief Executive Officer of Dignitana. "Hair loss from chemotherapy can strip that away. Our oncology partners know this well and helping them address this issue is an important part of what we do every day. Our DigniCap Dignitaries help us provide patients with a highly personalized level of support and care. We're grateful for their help."

Ovarian cancer accounts for three percent of cancers in U.S. women, with 22,000 new diagnoses in the U.S. each year and over 300,000 annual incidences worldwide. It ranks 5th in cancer deaths among women and more than 13,000 women will lose their lives to the disease this year. National nonprofits such as the Ovarian Cancer Research Alliance and National Ovarian Cancer Coalition provide resources for women who are coping with the disease.

In July, the American Medical Association approved a new CPT Code for scalp cooling that makes it possible for cancer centers to submit insurance reimbursement claims – a big step forward in making medical scalp cooling accessible to all.

Ms. Agostino and other DigniCap Dignitaries, as well as a host of medical experts, are available to speak with media about the role that body image and identity have played in their personal and professional experiences.
