entrepreneur based in Toronto, Rue Pigalle operates on philanthropic principles in order to support artisans and nurture craft and does not take a commission when a sale is made. "We see ourselves as modern-day Medicis championing crafts for future generations. Rue Pigalle is first and foremost a community. As its founder I am a community builder, a curator of craft experiences and a patron of crafts. I believe in the intrinsic value of manual intelligence, and in the importance of the role that artisans play in our society. I truly believe that nurturing craftspeople helps create a kinder and more connected society" says founder Isabelle Fish.

The Club, by Rue Pigalle showcases new artisans working in all kinds of materials across the world. Craft which displays exciting innovation and which conveys a strong message or story is of particular interest. The platform aims to create more connections between potential patrons and makers, and to enable more commissioning at all levels to take place.
