Global IT Training Market Trends:

Earlier, corporate training accounted for a significant share in the overall expenses of an organization. To reduce the associated costs, various firms have started offering IT training via e-learning methods. This trend can be accredited to the rising adoption of smartphones and broadband services, which aid learners in accessing the information anytime and anywhere. Moreover, the continually evolving technology and the growing business needs have led to the requirement for regular training programs for employees to aid them in understanding the latest developments in the industry. Furthermore, governments of numerous countries are introducing favorable policies and investing in the expansion of educational technology and e-learning methods, which in turn is escalating the demand for IT training across the globe. Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the global IT training market to exhibit moderate growth during the next five years (2021-2026).
