Competition Landscape: Top Acetone Derivative Companies

- To expand their consumer base, acetone derivative manufacturers are opting for a mix of organic and inorganic growth strategies such as capacity expansion, acquisitions, and collaborations to help them garner more market share that would provide them the desired competitive advantage.

- In December 2020, Mitsubishi Chemical Corporation announced that it had acquired "green field" property on the Mississippi river, and plans to construct a 350KT MMA plant. The plant is to be constructed based on the company's proven ALPHA technology.

- In March 2021 Lotte chemical announced that it will use Honeywell UOP Q-max, EVONIK MSHP, and Phenol 3G technologies to produce phenol and acetone derivatives. Through this technological engagement, Lotte chemicals aims at increasing its global production of phenol and acetone derivatives in order to raise its market position.

- In May 2021, Arkema announced divestment of its PMMA business to Trinseo. Following this divestment, Arkema aims at becoming a prominent player in the specialty material segment by 2024.

- In November 2019, ALTIVIA Ketones & Derivatives completed the acquisition of Dow's acetone derivative business. This move by Altivia would ensure the expansion of its ketone & additives business by providing quality products to the end user segment.
