Taste On TV is often celebrated for introducing a wide variety of fresh faces and personalities from all walks of life. Show hosts and producers are diverse in background and are freely provided with a platform to educate, discuss, or entertain. Many are business owners and have used the network to grow their brands and reach new consumers. "Taste On TV is an authentic source for all things culinary, cultural and lifestyle specifically and intentionally for people of color." Says Chef Angela Michelle. She adds, "We are an essential part of the Black Excellence equation you never knew you needed, but always wanted.

"We are always looking for ways to reshape media. Representation is the most important requirement. People need to see themselves and have entertaining content that accurately depicts their culture and the things they love." Explains the network's President, Terance Quilens Sr.

This year Taste On TV expanded its footprint into millions of new households. In September, the network gained access to Apple's 50 million-plus users on the Apple TV platform and 40 million more through Amazon's Fire Television. Taste On TV is also available on Roku and accessible through Taste On TV To Go, the network's native mobile application for Android and iOS. Viewers can also watch online on the network's website. In 2020 the network launched during the global pandemic. Even though it was hard to predict the business climate, the network's founder forged ahead and was able to quickly ramp up and debut more than 20 new show titles at launch.
