

T&L: Upcoming School Board Elections a Referendum on Parental Rights

In many communities, candidates are running for local school board seats who, if elected, will make important choices about their children's education

WOODLAND PARK, COLORADO, UNITED STATES, October 5, 2021

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Important local elections are coming this November and they will affect communities at their very core.

It is critical that conservative voices are heard at the polls since these elections will drastically impact the day-to-day lives of regular citizens, according to a guest on a recent Truth & Liberty Coalition livestcast.

“There’s thousands of races happening, and probably most people will have an opportunity to go vote in some type of municipal or school board race,” said Jason Yates of My Faith Votes on the Truth & Liberty Coalition (T&L) livestcast. “In those races . . . our vote counts exponentially.”

According to Yates, turnout in Denver, Colorado, for local elections in 2019 was about 40 percent, while turnout in the 2020 general election was estimated at over 85 percent. With a lower projected turnout for this year’s election, every vote counts “so much more,” said Yates.

In many communities, candidates are running for local school board seats who, if elected, will make important choices about your children’s education and your parental rights, he said.

This year's school board elections are more important than ever. Due to the pandemic, government-mandated school closures sent students home for months, forcing them to try to learn online. During that time, parents everywhere saw for themselves what their children were learning (and not learning) in public schools. Instead of just math and science, students were being indoctrinated with harmful leftist ideology, Yates said.

Over the past several months, concerned citizens have flooded school board meetings across the country, protesting curriculums based on critical race theory and anti-American propaganda, exposing pornographic materials in school libraries, and taking a stand against oppressive lockdowns and mandates. according to a Truth & Liberty Coalition official.

For conservative Christians with strong biblical values, it's important to know which candidates and issues to vote for. Truth & Liberty Coalition encourages you to "do your homework" and research what is on the ballot this year. Visit ChristianVoterGuide.com, and iVoterGuide.com to access digital voter guides, find the guide for your county and community, and then share them with your friends, family, neighbors, pastor, and church. For those who don't have voter guides for this year's school board and other local elections, Truth & Liberty executive director Richard Harris recently shared how you can get informed about your candidates.

On Nov. 2, your vote will make a difference for your community. Make the right choice and vote according to biblical values, Harris said.
