Energy ESO Market

Energy engineering services outsourcing (ESO) is the process of hiring outside energy service providers (ESPs) to perform in-house tasks. The emergence of new technologies includes digitization of power plants, virtual prototyping, smart grid management, and embedded product engineering. Consequently, ESPs are shifting towards more advanced systems that can provide more predictable and high-quality services. ESO also reduces the investment and labor costs by outsourcing services to ESPs and execute appropriate strategies to complete projects promptly.

We are regularly tracking the direct effect of COVID-19 on the market, along with the indirect influence of associated industries. These observations will be integrated into the report.
