Gandhi explained, "The pandemic laid bare that all companies are technology companies. And now whether a client was ready for the pandemic or not, they are all investing significantly in their digital platforms. While clients have the investments and a list of technology projects, they lack the resources, knowhow and solution blueprints to accelerate time to value. This is where partners like ITsavvy and Alcor Solutions can help clients deliver business outcomes."

Tom Gibson, Alcor Solutions Principal and Head of Strategic Solutions, said, "I've enjoyed working with Munu and Brent over the past several years as they have delivered many digital transformations to clients. I am looking forward to hearing more about their experiences and insights on how organizations are recovering from the pandemic and getting answers to important questions. They will share their views on the implications for leaders and how technology partners are helping firms accelerate time to value in delivering business outcomes."
