Because protein is the main fuel source, these ingredients are essential for the functioning of the body. They can be obtained from plants as well as animals. Plant proteins are commonly obtained from wheat, peas and soybeans and are used to texture plant proteins. Plant protein helps fight diabetes and obesity effectively. Animal protein is widely used as a protein supplement for muscle building. At the same time, the huge demand for animal protein and the growing awareness of healthy eating and fitness are driving the global protein ingredient market significantly. In addition, the growing use of soy isolates and consumption rates of eggs and casein have further boosted the growth of the global protein ingredients market. In addition, the cost sensitivity associated with the production of protein-rich products negatively impacts the growth of the global protein ingredients market. However, the rapid launch of pocket-friendly protein supplement products is expected to aid the growth of the market during the forecast period.
