US Skin Care Products Industry Trends and Drivers:

The growing beauty consciousness, particularly among the millennial and urban population, is primarily driving the US skin care products market. Furthermore, the rising number of working women and the elevating consumer living standards are augmenting the per capita expenditures on skin care products in the country.

Additionally, the escalating occurrences of skin-related disorders due to increasing pollution levels and hectic work schedules are further fueling the product demand. Besides this, the emergence of organic and natural ingredients-based alternatives and vegan-certified beauty items are also bolstering the market growth.

Moreover, several manufacturers are introducing male grooming products to cater to changing preferences and requirements of consumers. Apart from this, the increasing internet penetration, the rising influence of social media beauty trends, and elevating celebrity endorsements are anticipated to propel the US skin care products market in the coming years.
