

Mobile And Smart Technologies Shape The Refrigerated Warehousing And Storage Market

The Business Research Company's Refrigerated Warehousing And Storage Global Market Report 2021 - COVID-19 Impact and Recovery

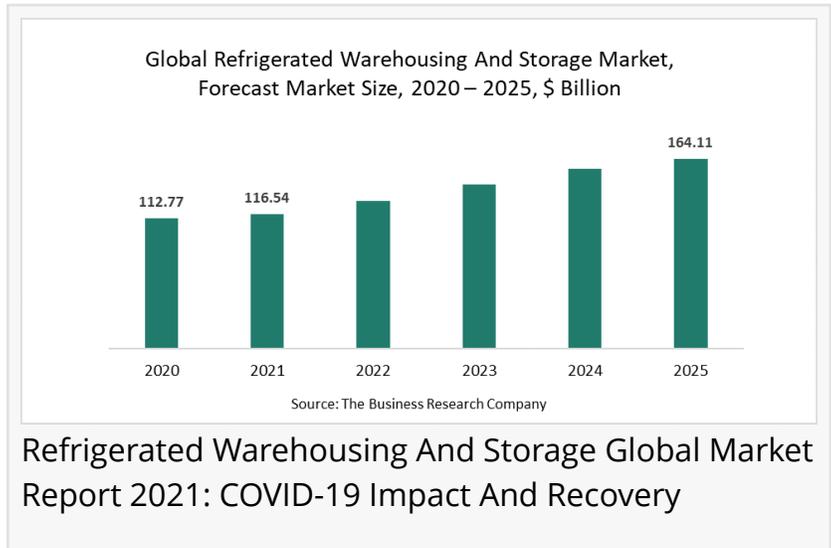

LONDON, GREATER LONDON, UK, October 14, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Warehouses are increasingly using mobile technologies to efficiently monitor warehouse operations. Mobile technology involves the use of tablets, smart phones, mobile printers and other handheld devices for communication and information. These devices make use of GPS, RFID, VoIP, digital imaging, and voice technology. Technicians operating forklifts and automated material handling equipment in a warehouse are using mobile technologies to obtain information on troubleshooting, repairs, and work orders. This gives warehouse managers access to equipment status and performance reports and enables them to track warehouse operations around the clock. Wearable technology such as smart glass is being integrated with warehouse management systems to improve hands-free mobility for workers. According to a report by MHI, a material handling, logistics and supply chain association, 22% of the respondents use mobile technologies in warehouses and the adoption rate is expected to reach 45% in next two years.

Asia Pacific was the largest region in the global refrigerated warehousing and storage market, accounting for 34% of the market in 2020. North America was the second largest region, accounting for 26% of the global refrigerated warehousing and storage market. Africa was the smallest region in the global refrigerated warehousing and storage market.
