Manhattan Book Group was founded by no. 1 best-selling author J.J. Hebert, a leading expert in book publishing. He launched the company to give unagented authors the opportunity to be published by a NYC-based publisher without having to go through gatekeepers, for example sending out waves of query letters only to face rejection or no response at all. Manhattan Book Group vets manuscripts quickly and efficiently and decides on each manuscript within about a week.

"As the granddaughter of Ernest Hemingway and an author herself, Mariel Hemingway has been involved in publishing for years and she understands the benefits that Manhattan Book Group brings to the table," said Hebert in a recent company statement. "We strive to make book publishing easier and more streamlined than ever through our hybrid offering."
