

Kenneth Cushing, NetCentrics CEO, Joins NDIA Board of Directors

Role Will Contribute to Constituencies' Education on National Security

HERNDON, VA, UNITED STATES, October 15, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Newly appointed NetCentrics CEO, Kenneth Cushing, joins the board of directors of the National Defense Industrial Association. NDIA brings together the military, government, industry, and academia to drive strategic conversations about national security. The association announced 16 new members representing a diverse range of viewpoints and perspectives.

"It is a privilege to join an esteemed group of professionals committed to serving the warfighter in peacekeeping initiatives," says Cushing. "I will use my multi-dimensional defense, intelligence community, and homeland security experience in service of NDIA's mission. I have the unique opportunity to tap into the combined intellectual expertise of NetCentrics' well-established, deep experience in cybersecurity and national defense in service to NDIA's mission, too."

Kenneth Cushing, CEO of NetCentrics

NetCentrics

NetCentrics, established in 1995, was among the country's first cybersecurity contractors engaged to provide digital defense at the Pentagon, the Department of Defense, and the Department of Homeland Security. The company remains a trusted vendor in the no-fail operation environments of the U.S. armed services, government branches, and related public agencies. The company protects some of the nation's most crucial digital infrastructure that underpins private industry, too.

“Cushing will be an asset to the Board because he combines military service and private industry perspectives, both so vital in an ever-shifting threat environment,” says NDIA’s Chairman, Arnold Punaro. “His leadership role at NetCentrics will enable NDIA to benefit from contact with the emerging technologies and strategies necessary to defend our country.”

Cushing is a Director (Colonel, USAF reserves) at CISA. Earlier this month, he joined NetCentrics from Avantus Federal where he served as SVP of Defense, leading their largest business.

[Cushing's] leadership role at NetCentrics will enable NDIA to benefit from contact with the emerging technologies and strategies necessary to defend our country.”
