The escalating demand for pig meat and other related products across the globe is primarily driving the market growth. Furthermore, several key manufacturers are introducing vitamin supplements and various other nutrients in the swine feed to enhance the quality and texture of the pork. Additionally, the growing awareness towards numerous nutritional benefits of swine feed has resulted in the increased number of swine feed mills. In accordance with this, several pig farmers are shifting from conventional swine feed towards functional and premium variants that help in boosting the immunity of the animals against enzootic diseases. Besides this, the increasing demand for organic pig meat that are cultivated without antibiotics, GMOs, and chemical feed additives, is anticipated to further propel the global swine feed over the forecasted period. Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the global swine feed market to reach a value of US$ 170 Billion by 2026.
