Technological advancements in OIS, associated advantages of OIS over conventional record maintenance, and surge in prevalence of cancer worldwide drive the growth of the market. In addition, rise in awareness about the benefits of OIS is expected to supplement the market growth. However, high treatment costs associated with OIS and dearth of healthcare IT professionals hamper the market growth. On the other hand, integration of oncology information systems for the treatment of rare cancer types and increased usage of artificial intelligence (AI) in oncology information systems are expected to present new opportunities to market players in the future.
