“Seeing so many like-minded and influential people coming out to support our mission to end poverty gives me even more motivation to press on,” said Richmond-Shockley. “We must continue to fight for those that cannot fight for themselves. Poverty is a cancer, and God has blessed me to be able to care for others, and that is what I will continue to do.”

During the event, Richmond-Shockley received The President's Lifetime Achievement Service Award from President Joe Biden, presented by Atlanta Public School

Board Member Erika Mitchell. It was also announced that on March 5th, they would be hosting a community food distribution in the morning followed by the Care In The Air Block Party that evening at Caring For Others.

“The International Poverty Forum will bring together the best and brightest minds from around the world to address real strategies that can be put into action,” said Richmond-Shockley. “At

Caring For Others we are bringing everyone to the table to be part of a global solution to ending poverty.”
