Presentation Abstract Summary

As carbon capture and low carbon fuels are increasingly seen as critically necessary to achieve net zero emissions targets, getting successful projects built requires successful project financing, structured to monetize tax credits and incentives. Gideon Gradman will discuss the set of relevant federal and state policies and incentives that are helping get carbon capture and hydrogen technologies to market at scale, and how they might be applied to new energy infrastructure and industrial projects.

"We are pleased to bring a discussion around project financing strategies being discussed by the investment community at our Fall Hydrogen & Carbon Capture Conference on November 11, 2021 at the Hilton Garden at Southpointe in Canonsburg, Pennsylvania" said Tom Gellrich, H2-CCS Network, Founder.

Gellrich further added, "Baker Tilly has extensive experience helping low carbon fuels projects get financed and built. I'm sure conference participants will find his information valuable and timely in the current market environment."
