

Kids Read Now projects 7 million books delivered by 2024

Nonprofit moves to larger dream-delivering facility

DAYTON, OH, UNITED STATES, November 9, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Kids Read Now started as a small, local nonprofit organization and has rapidly grown into an impressive leader in the fight against K-5 learning loss. Most students, particularly those from lower income families, experience steep reading skill loss over the summer break. Creating home libraries and engaging parents are key ways to accelerating summer learning and reversing the slide associated with summer break and extended school closures.

Kids Read Now sends millions of books to K-5 kids across America

Since 2013, Kids Read Now has mailed over two million books-to-keep. This past summer KRN served nearly 100,000 K-5 students across the country. According to Kids Read Now CEO and co-founder, Leib Lurie, "Kids Read Now is on a trajectory to mail over 7 million books to K-5 students nationwide by 2024."

This exciting growth has highlighted the need for a new, larger fulfillment center. More books to more kids equals higher literacy rates and dreams delivered for America's youth.

Kids Read Now's new fulfillment center is 21,000 square feet, 33% bigger than its previous space. "This new, expanded space will help us reach our goal of serving 1 million kids each summer," says Jim McDonald, Kids Read Now's Fulfillment Center Manager. "Having this large, flexible space and leveraging the talented local work force made this expansion decision easy," adds

Leib.

Proud to partner with hundreds of school districts nationwide, Kids Read Now is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization with the singular mission to eliminate learning loss for K-5 students. Learn more about Kids Read Now at KidsReadNow.org.
