According to the UN, urbanization is taking place in a major section of the world. Urban regions now contain almost 54.8% of the world's population. Increase in knowledge of more modern sanitary fittings such as taps has come from urbanization. Growth in urbanization and rise in number of nuclear families, especially in developing nations, have created a significant need for stainless steel pipes for plumbing applications.

Plumbing pipes used in kitchens, toilets or bathrooms in hotels, malls, offices, and public places are considered under the non-residential category. Renovation of old bathrooms and kitchens in residential and non-residential buildings and new construction projects is driving the stainless-steel plumbing pipes market. In addition, rise in new residential and commercial construction buildings increases the sale of stainless steel plumbing pipes.
