Fertilizer Market Industry Definition and Application:

Fertilizer represents an additional mixture applied to the soil or plant tissue to provide essential nutrients for growing farm-based crops. They can be broadly classified into organic and inorganic variants. Organic fertilizers are mainly manufactured with carbon-based agricultural waste, livestock manure, industrial waste, municipal sludge, etc., whereas inorganic variants are produced using different chemicals and secondary nutrient sources. Fertilizers are typically utilized to supply specific nutrients that are deficient in the soil, such as potassium, nitrogen, phosphorus, etc. It also aids in maintaining the fertility of the soil and improving its water retention capacity.

Note: We are regularly tracking the direct effect of COVID-19 on the market, along with the indirect influence of associated industries. These observations will be integrated into the report.

Fertilizer Market Trends and Drivers:

The expanding agriculture sector, coupled with the escalating adoption of organic and farm-fresh food products, is primarily driving the demand for fertilizers. Moreover, the growing consumption of plant-based food sources is further augmenting the need for fertilizers to enhance soil fertility and improving crop growth. Additionally, the emergence of bio-fertilizers due to the rising concerns towards the negative impact of chemical-based fertilizers on soil quality is also positively influencing the global market. Furthermore, the implementation of favorable government policies promoting the use of nano-fertilizers and the development of advanced farming techniques will continue to stimulate the growth of the global fertilizer market over the forecasted period.
