We have used this walking tour service for Charleston and Salem, and we LOVE it. Truly the best!! Will never go back to a normal tour again since I found this! Highly recommend!”

You'll hear tales of the haunted Hard Rock Cafe, the hanging tree at Captain Tony's, the doll that inspired the movie Chucky, and you'll even go to the haunt where Hemingway appears every now and then.

You'll encounter two ghost stories at the first haunted stop,

Captain Tony's Saloon, formally known as Sloppy Joe's.

The building that Captain Tony's is in was first built in 1851 as an icehouse that doubled as the city morgue. How convenient. In the 1980's when the bar owner renovated, he had quite the shock. In the ground he found 16 rotting bodies. One of them, Elvira, had her own headstone in the ground. Today that same headstone can be seen on the floor of the pool room, while her bones remain at rest underneath.

But that's not the old bar's creepiest story. Not by a long shot. Inside the bar, guests will notice a peculiar tree growing through the ceiling. That's the old hanging tree where at least 15 pirates and one murderer met their death at the end of a noose.

The scariest of those hung was a woman who killed her family in a crime of passion. As legend has it, on a dark stormy night, a young mother learned of her cheating husband's ways and in a fit of rage picked up her trusty kitchen knife and proceeded to stab her husband and two children to death. They did not see it coming.

When the neighbor saw her feeding the remains of her family to the pigs in the back, they alerted police. She was quickly arrested, still wearing her blue nightgown covered in blood of her family.

Later that day, she was hung by the neck right there on the hanging tree that grows inside Captain Tony's. You can bet your shrimp and grits she still haunts this bar.

The woman's tormented soul lurks in the pool room still wearing her blood stained blue nightgown from that murderous night. The locals call her The Lady in Blue.

Some say she is searching for the homewrecker that ruined her life. Others think she just may be stuck here for eternity regretting her murders. I guess you'll have to get a drink and ask her yourself.
