Growing focus of governments in smart cities is expected to boost global video surveillance and VSaaS market growth over the forecast period. Governments of many countries are focused on smart city projects, which in turn, is boosting investments in VSaaS. For instance, in June 2015, the Government of India launched ‘100 Smart Cities Mission’ project, under which government approved US$ 14 billion. Smart cities have extensive deployment of networked video surveillance systems since the smart city concept is about information collection, storage, and distribution. Moreover, crime prevention is a major concern in smart cities since they are major hub of economic activities and preferred targets for terrorist activities and criminal offences. There is a high demand for cloud-hosted VSaaS, owing to its benefits including cost-effectiveness, scalability, and the low total cost of ownership, reliability, low maintenance, and reduced workloads.
