In addition, the increasing expenditure on the military by countries of many regions such as Asia Pacific, North America, and Europe, is propelling the demand for military aircraft components. For instance, according to CMI's analysis, the expenditure of the U.S. government on their military is considered to be the highest among all countries across the globe. In FY 2019, the annual budget of U.S government was around US$ 686 Billion for the year, and out of this, nearly US$ 194 Billion was allocated for the U.S. Department of Air Force, who spend a part of their mentioned budget on the procurement of aircraft parts, operation, maintenance activities, and advanced technologies.

Moreover, the increasing expenditure on air travel by the people of U.S. and Canada, owing to high GPD (Gross domestic product) per capita of the U.S. and Canada, is expected to propel the North America aircraft parts market. For instance, during the period of 2016 to 2019, the GDP per capita income of the U.S. and Canada increased from US$ 57,951 to US$ 65,297 and US$ 42,322 to US$ 46,194, respectively.
