Market Trends

The growing geriatric population and the rising incidences of injuries caused during manual patient handling (MPH) are primarily driving the patient handling equipment market. Moreover, various government bodies across countries are implementing stringent regulations to encourage the adoption of protective equipment, which is also propelling the market growth. In addition to this, the increasing investments in hospital infrastructures to improve the overall patient handling capabilities of public healthcare systems are further bolstering the product demand. Additionally, the rising prevalence of disabilities among individuals is catalyzing the demand for patient lifting equipment, such as wheelchairs and mobile lifts. In the coming years, the rising integration of recent advancements, such as better bed frames, adjustable angles, shear and friction reduction, electric backrest, battery backups, support surfaces, etc., is expected to drive the global patient handling equipment market.

Note: We are regularly tracking the direct effect of COVID-19 on the market, along with the indirect influence of associated industries. These observations will be integrated into the report.
