Here are a few of the ways available to customize a car:

Automotive Restyling

Automotive restyling is a fun way to change things up. Whether it is changing a grey car to hot pink, adding tint to windows, or business advertising on the side of a vehicle, there are a variety of products to achieve each goal. There are a variety of different ways that this can be achieved, and it is best to consult with a professional to make sure the outcome is perfect and the products are good.

Color Change Film

Maybe a car is just old, maybe it's slightly unattractive or starting to turn grey. There's an easy solution. Getting a car wrapped is easier and faster than getting a car painted. Plus, it's removable! Just peel off the vinyl when it's time to trade the car in. In the meantime, enjoy the envious stares.

Automotive shops can diversify their offerings by adding color wrap film to their menu of services.

Car Paint Protection Film

Currently, 200 million people are Googling car paint protection film. A car is a major investment, and American car owners want to protect that investment. Car paint protection film is cheaper than building a garage. More and more people are willing to lay out the cash to protect their car from sunlight, debris, bird droppings, acid rain, tree sap, insects and other hazards that can mar a car's finish.

Providing car paint protection film can be invaluable to customers. They probably don't realize just how much value their car will retain when they eventually trade it in! All automotive restyling shops should consider offering these services.

Automotive window tint film prevents glare from the sun, keeps a car cooler in summer and protects privacy. But most customers decide to get tinted windows because they look cool. Everyone wants to know who's behind that window tint. Is it Beyoncé? Tom Brady? Prince Harry?

"Regional Supply's car window tint film provides the shield your customers want at the right price," said Wiscombe.
