Modern business dynamics are changing rapidly. Companies constantly need additional staff for their projects but do not want to hire them permanently. Some organizations hire extra talent during a peak season or festivals to cope up with the increased demand. Due to the Covid-19 pandemic, remote and flexible working, short-term hiring has become crucial in today's world.

Temporary staffing has multiple important advantages for businesses. An organization can scale up or scale down its manpower depending on its needs. As temporary and contractual workers are not permanent, the company doesn't have to provide statutory benefits to them which saves a lot of time and money. Moreover, hiring the temporary staff takes the load off from the permanent employees, boosting their morale and productivity. As companies can let go temp workers once the job is done, it imparts flexibility to employers as well as employees. A win-win situation for both.

A perfect mix of temporary and permanent employees is necessary to maintain the equilibrium in the company.
