EINPresswire.com/ -- Suddenly and harshly, an accident can disrupt a person's day—and their life. It can cause pain, expenses, missed work and income and more hardships.

If the incident resulted from another individual's negligence, a personal injury claim can help someone put back together the financial pieces of their life, restoring a measure of stability.

But coping with a car wreck can be confusing and difficult. People may wonder how to navigate the aftermath of an accident to maximize the settlement available to them.

The Ohio personal injury lawyers at Horenstein, Nicolson & Blumenthal offer the following tips for what to do immediately after an accident:

1. Get urgent medical care. Even if you feel OK at first, just a little shaken up, debilitating pain can appear hours or days after the accident.
2. Call law enforcement so they can file a report. Notify the police as soon as possible.
3. Get contact information for witnesses. Collect phone numbers and emails at the accident site, if your injuries allow it.

The Ohio car accident lawyers at Horenstein, Nicholson & Blumenthal (HNB) can share tips on what to do after an accident.

4. Take photos of the scene if you're able. Visual documentation can be critical when pursuing a claim.

5. Be careful talking to insurance companies. Insurance companies may use comments you make against you. Or they'll offer you a quick payout designed to save themselves money more than help you.

6. Consult an attorney to protect your rights. Beware of attorneys who contact you first. Instead, seek out a firm you can trust who will fight for the compensation you need.
