NHMI's vision is "to be salt and light for generations to come." It provides experienced, indigenous staff to guide West African church leaders through the process of adaptation and growth.

"We are an indigenous mission with 100 percent native staff and workers. We aim to be a catalyst in establishing a generation of true disciples and worshipers," organizers said.

The C.S. Lewis Society was organized by Princeton University students in 1975, as a guest-speaker forum for the campus community to hear Christian scholars articulate a biblical perspective on topics of wide public concern. After years of fruitful ministry, the Society was re-launched on the campus of Trinity College of Florida in 1988 as a fellowship of those committed to explaining and defending the Christian faith internationally. The college is at 2430 Welbilt Blvd. in Trinity.

"Our outreach has focused especially on university campuses and nations that are dominated by skeptical attitudes toward the core truths of Christianity," said Dr. Tom Woodward, head of the society and director of Trinity College's Center for University Ministries.
