CEO Eslene Richmond-Shockley. “People deserve to live their lives with dignity, and shouldn’t have to worry about basic necessities when we should be enjoying time with family and loved ones.”

The distribution takes place at Caring For Others headquarters (3537 Browns Mill Road SE in Atlanta). Individuals wishing to volunteer at the distribution or to make a donation can find those options on the organization’s website at www.Caring4Others.org. Caring For Others will be providing poultry and other meats, produce, and clothing as we head into the cold winter months.

“Comfort & Care is our biggest distribution of the year where we give away thousands of pounds of food, as well as boxes of clothing to help hundreds of families in poverty, just as winter is approaching," said Richmond-Shockley. "The more volunteers and donations we have, the bigger we can make it. It's been a difficult year for so many and we are blessed to be able to provide a good meal and some comfort to those that need it most."
