The site, designed by Story Monsters LLC, will be the one-stop shop for all Borrmann's stories and a place to engage with the burgeoning children's author.

“I am very excited to launch my new website, a place where I can connect with people and people can connect with me,” Borrmann said. “This is where people can find book news and information about forthcoming titles all in one spot.”

A Canadian schoolteacher, Borrmann began writing children's books following the birth of her first grandchild. She said she wanted to “do something special for her,” which inspired the creation of The Jolly Bupbub. Borrmann is currently in the process of releasing her second children's book, which was also borne out of ideas from her grandchildren.

“My always inspiring grandchildren give me so many story ideas, so I just keep writing,” she said. “I am excited about the possibility of publishing more fun stories for all kids.”

Borrmann and her husband, Mark, live in a small town in Canada not too far from the wood field described in The Jolly Bupbub. The story tells the tale of a little Bupbub who lives with two cats in a red brick house near a river. Borrmann takes readers into a world with adorable creatures accentuated by captivating pictures and descriptions. The book, which is Story Monsters Approved, an Indies Today finalist and a KIRKUS best books of 2020, is available for sale on Amazon, Indigo Chapters, Barnes and Noble and the Book Depository online and at stores in both Canada and the United States.
