Developed Economies Continue to be at the Forefront of Demand

With growing expenditure on aviation infrastructure in developed counties of North America and Europe, the sales volume of airport catering trucks is expected to remain concentrated in the United States, Germany, the United Kingdom and Russia. North America region is at the vanguard of global demand, followed by European countries – surging popularity of air travel in developing countries is complementing demand.

Growing emphasis on enhancing airport infrastructure, coupled with increasing number of airports in emerging economies of India and China has been instrumental in driving sales in these regional markets. China is likely to ramp up demand for airport catering trucks – the Government of China plans to develop 136 new airports by 2025. Sales are also likely to be resurgent in Oceania and India.

Pricing Pressures Continue to Fuel Demand for Non-refrigerated Trucks vis-à-vis Refrigerated Variants

Refrigeration has always been a major factor of concern, when it comes to transportation of food products. Refrigeration incurs high costs, which consequently increases the overall pricing of airport catering trucks. Preference for airport catering trucks without refrigeration has conventionally remained higher owing to pricing pressures, and the status quo is likely to remain unaltered during the period of assessment, 2018-2028.
