LONDON, GREATER LONDON, UK,
November 22, 2021 /

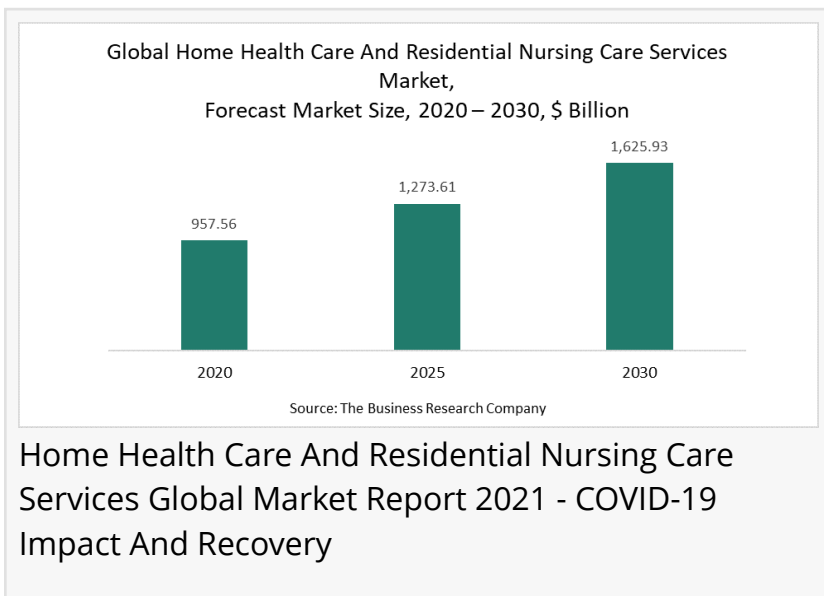

EINPresswire.com/ -- Both public and private home health care providers are adopting electronic visitor verification technologies to track time and curb fraud by health care professionals. Nursing care providers are using electronic means such as telephone calls and GPS tracking to locate and validate the presence of health care professional in the facility. For instance, Axxess uses combination of GPS cellular and Wi-Fi technology and records the date, time and location of home care visitor using cloud technology.

Nursing homes are changing the way care is offered to the patients. They are shifting from institutional or hospital style of management to resident-centered care management. In institutional-style nursing homes, the focus is on task-centered approaches including monitoring of physical health of the patients. In resident-oriented care, residents can choose their own schedule and design their own daily routine. St. Camillus Health Center in the US is providing resident-oriented care for their patients.
