Lokolil is a 21-year-old up-and-coming musician hailing from deep within the Bronx, New York. From a young age, Lokolil experienced dire hardships, living the street life in which he saw a great deal of violence and the subsequent loss of his friends and family. During these times of dire straits, Lokolil knew his life meant more than what he was born into and set his sights and talents on the bright lights of the music industry.

"As a veteran of the streets, I've collected many stories from the hood that I knew I wanted to share with the world," says Lokolil. "I've always loved music and the message it sends, especially Bronx Drill, which is one of the greatest breakout eras of the industry. Lokolil's authenticity, combined with sample drill beats, has rapidly made him an artist that fans respect and connect to on a deep and personal level.

Additionally, as a result of his profound talent, Lokolil has captured the attention of big names in the industry, including No Jumper, Kazi Magazine, Shawn Barron from Motown, and YouTube sensation BLOU, among others. In fact, his latest single, You Are My High, has already gone viral on YouTube with almost 300,000 views. Not only that, but the artist has deals on the table with major labels who see his remarkable talent for exactly what it is.
