The chemical industry is more diverse than virtually any other industry. Harnessing basic ingredients, the industry produces an array of products that not usually seen or used by consumers but are essential components of practically every consumer and industrial product. Most of the chemical industry products are intermediates, and the customers of chemical company are often other chemical companies. Several companies in this industry are also at the forefront of emerging biotechnology industries.

Public and community concerns about the performance of chemical manufacturers has led the industry participants to follow environmental performance standards. The ongoing research and development activities to expand the application scope of materials and chemicals, while reducing environmental impact is a key driving factor for the industry growth.

Over the years, mergers and acquisitions, collaborations, and partnerships have played a pivotal
