EINPresswire.com/ -- The Kaolin Market is forecasted to grow from USD 5.45 Billion in 2020 to USD 7.55 Billion by

2028, at a CAGR of 4.21%, during the forecast period. Increasing kaolin consumption in various end-user industries, such as paper, ceramics & sanitary commodities, fiberglass, paints & coatings, rubber and plastics, is one of the most significant factors expected to drive growth in the kaolin market.

Ceramic sanitary products such as washbasins, shower plates, toilet bowls, and bathtubs have features such as corrosion resistance, abrasion resistance, and glossy surface finish, making them a superior alternative to steel and other metal products. These products are increasingly being used throughout the world in residential and commercial buildings. It is also expected that growing population and improved living standards will fuel the demand for ceramic products. These factors are estimated to increase demand for kaolin and thus boost global market growth over the forecast period.

It is expected that initiatives undertaken by the governments of Bangladesh and India to promote literacy will result in high paper demand, thus driving market growth over the forecast period. However, the threat of calcium carbonate substitution for paper production may hamper growth in demand over the coming years.
