Allied Market Research

Testing of blood is one of the oldest and most widely used techniques to rule out the presence of any disease. Blood tests are used to assure the biochemical and physiological well-being of humans. They are also used to confirm the proper functioning of vital organs such as liver, kidney and thyroid and to understand the effectiveness of given therapeutics. The technological innovations along with consistent demand for better blood testing technologies have intensified the global competition. The market is growing owing to the burgeoning demand for point-of-care and minimally invasive testing devices.
