severity of the case along with the crime committed if bail will be offered to the accused. The judge also decides how much the bail amount will be set based on the seriousness of the crime, flight risk, criminal history, and ties to the community. After bail is set, if assistance is required, it is time to call a bondsman within the area. In Fort Worth, the place to call is Liberty Bail Bond. In most cases, Liberty Bail Bond will ask for a fee or percentage of the bond amount to obtain a surety bond, however, there are other times they will hold a larger asset as collateral. If cost is an issue, bring it up to your agent, they sometimes offer payment plans upon request. Once Liberty Bail Bond receives their fee, they will complete the initial paperwork which takes anywhere from 15-30 minutes then pay the entirety of the bond amount to the courts.

After payment is received by the courts, the bond is then posted and the inmate at Tarrant County Correction is released. This processing time ranges, in the police station release can take 1-3 hours, in the county jail the process can take 2-8 hours. Like most life situations, the busier the holding facility, the longer the release process. Shortly after the person is released from corrections, it is important to contact your agent at the bail bond office as soon as possible. The new client and agent of Liberty Bail Bond will then walk through all the paperwork required. The paperwork states the fees, expectations, rules, and requirements. A bail loan is only provided under certain conditions, such as the defendant will, without a doubt, arrive at all court dates and follow all conditions of his/her bail given by the courts. The expectations and regulations remain in effect until all court responsibilities and all payments to the Liberty Bail Bond are met. Not doing so will result in the surrender of bail to the courts and a warrant being issued for the defendant.
