is a troubled and messed up man. When he grew up and had his freedom at 35, he was determined to be an upright man and hoped to have a peaceful marriage. Arriving in Turkey, he loves the place and finally meets and falls in love with Myriam al-Montee, a half-Turkish half-Saudi Arabian Muslim woman. They get married without knowing that the father of Myriam was a prejudiced father, who hopes to use her daughter to found his dynasty, and strict.

Consequences will happen, then, they hide from her father in Alexandria and Cairo and arrive in Jerusalem. A lot of events occurred after that. But fate holds more vicious challenges.

“It starts with a tone of misery and becomes a story full of suspense and intrigue, which inevitably leads readers to wonder if these two tortured souls will find love with one another once and forever. After all, everyone deserves a happy ending with the one they have fallen for.”
