The North American region accounted for the maximum share in the global date sugar market. The North America region constitutes developed economies such as U.S. and Canada as well as Mexico as a developing nation. The companies are continuously enhancing the overall business processes to meet the customers' demand for high-quality products and services in the best possible way. Several domestic and multinational companies already have a strong foothold in the North American countries like the U.S. and Canada. From the past few years, there has been interesting concerning the growing and high consumption of sweeteners in the United States. Projected U.S. sugar production for the fiscal year 2019 is decreased, as both beet sugar and cane sugar production are lowered based on most recent crop data by FAO (Food and Agriculture Organization). Domestic deliveries for the fiscal year are also reduced as well, based on decreasing forecast totals than previously reported for 2018.

The demand for food applications is increasing rapidly all over the world, which is the growing demand for organic sugar. Consumers across the world are highly inclined towards the products that are made from natural substances, which has influenced the manufacturers to use organic date sugar in their products. Organic date sugar is used widely in bakery products like cookies, biscuits, cakes, pastry, muffins, jams, marmalades, etc. Organic date sugar can also be used in ice creams as well as chocolates. Thus, the increasing demand for organic date sugar in the food & beverage industry will be opening new avenues for the date sugar market.
