The market in India is primarily driven by the rising preference for personal grooming. Moreover, the increasing incidences of dental caries and periodontal diseases across the country due to the shifting dietary patterns of individuals are providing a boost to the sales of oral hygiene products. Along with this, continual product innovations, such as the introduction of electric and sonic toothbrushes that are integrated with 3D motion sensors and Bluetooth connectivity, are providing an impetus to the market growth. Other factors, including easy product availability through organized retail channels and the inflating disposable incomes of the masses, are also acting as major growth-inducing factors.
