Biopsy is a medical test commonly performed by surgeons, interventional radiologists, or interventional cardiologists, which involves sampling of cells or tissues to determine the presence or extent of a disease. There are varieties of biopsy procedures available in the commercial disease diagnosis market, namely conventional and advanced biopsy procedures. Conventional procedures include fine needle biopsy, core needle biopsy, surgical biopsy, and others. The advanced biopsy procedures include CT-guided biopsy, MRI, ultrasound, stereotactic biopsies, and others.

Based on product, the needle-based biopsy instruments segment dominated the biopsy devices industry in 2018 due to rise in number of breast cancer, gastrointestinal tract diseases, and soft tissue sarcomas. Another factor that drives the growth of the segment is aspiration biopsy needles are non-invasive and provide efficient sample collection.

Depending on application, the breast biopsy segment accounted for the highest revenue share in biopsy devices market in 2018 and is expected to maintain its dominance during the forecast period owing to rise in number of breast cancer patients. In addition, increase in public awareness for disease screening and technological advancement in biopsy devices is expected to drive the growth of the biopsy devices market.
