Nespresso & Johanna Ortiz Gifts of the Forest

To bring the design of their limited-edition collection to life, Nespresso has partnered with Colombian luxury fashion designer Johanna Ortiz, whose innovative designs and interplay between nature and sustainability truly transports coffee aficionados into Nespresso's festive universe.

Johanna Ortiz says "For me, design and nature go hand in hand which is why this collaboration resonated personally. Colombian coffee also has a truly special place in my heart and as an active supporter in the fight against climate change, knowing that Nespresso is going beyond its agroforestry commitments by supporting the protection of 10 million trees in the Amazon, it was another huge reason why this collaboration made perfect sense. When designing the collection, I took the idea of capturing the beauty of the forest throughout every piece, by incorporating rich forest canopies and dark earthy tones within my designs. It's been an amazing process and partnership which I have deeply enjoyed."

A gift back to the forest

Nespresso is also proud to be partnering with Conservation International to gift back to the forest this festive season. For almost 20 years, Nespresso has been focused on protecting nature through agroforestry projects to protect the ecosystems its coffee farms rely on. To take this further beyond coffee farming and support the local communities that call the forest home, Nespresso is also announcing its contribution to protecting 10 million trees in the Amazon Forest in La Pedrera, Colombia. The effort is in collaboration with Conservation International and La Pedrera's Madroño community. Forest conservation plays a huge role in Nespresso's sustainability vision, which is to create a cup of coffee that has a positive impact on the world - from the coffee cherry to the cup.
