customers' networks in many markets worldwide”, said Jay Akin, CEO, Mushroom Networks. “Our products are backed by our excellent service. We treat our customer's success as our own and that is reflected in the quality of our products and services that we provide.”

Mushroom Networks broadband bonding technology leverages aggregation of various Internet connections to create a better performing Internet connectivity that enables applications that are otherwise not possible. As an example, the Portabella 4000i, one of the company's flagship products, is frequently used for in-vehicle Internet connectivity for data, video, and other real-time applications to provide fiber-like performance in mobile environments. The small appliance has 4 SIM slot openings that can be populated with SIM cards from different cellular carriers to add higher bandwidth and reliability via the patented aggregation technology.

“Our extensive research and judging process is driven by merit and centered around an in-depth evaluation of skills and services on offer. Mushroom Networks demonstrated expertise within their field, dedication to customer service and a commitment to promoting excellence.” said Victoria Cotton, Awards Executive, MEA Markets. She added that “victors are not determined by popularity of votes, but by their contributions to their industry.”
