Smart bridges

Smart bridges are technologically enhanced bridges that inform the maintenance department of any uncertainties, such as structural difficulties, that could lower the chance of collapsing before they occur. One of the factors driving the growth of the smart bridge market is the increased sales of electric vehicles. According to Coherent Market Insights, over 962 thousand units of electric automobiles were sold globally in 2017, an increase from 695 thousand units in 2016. The growing popularity of electric vehicles has resulted in a strong demand for charging these vehicles while driving. This has resulted in a significant demand for smart roads and bridges. Sweden, for example, was the first country in the world to build an electric road in 2016, a two-kilometer stretch on the E16 freeway near Gavle city in central Sweden. Likewise, Israel has begun testing wireless charging highways and bridges for electric vehicles.
