EINPresswire.com/ -- According to the latest report by IMARC Group, titled "Reclaimed Lumber Market: Global Industry Trends, Share, Size, Growth, Opportunity and Forecast 2021-2026", the global reclaimed lumber market grew at a CAGR of around 4% during 2015-2020. Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the global reclaimed lumber market to exhibit moderate growth during 2021-2026. Reclaimed lumber refers to processed wood recovered from its original purposes to be used for new applications. It is generally retrieved from wood packaging and old buildings by the careful deconstruction of wooden elements from the structures while preserving the integrity and shape of boards and beams. Reclaimed lumber is extensively used for home building purposes, including flooring, siding, paneling, cabinetry, furniture, and other architectural products. This wood reduces landfill wastes, minimizes the dependency on natural timber, and reduces carbon footprints in construction projects.

We are regularly tracking the direct effect of COVID-19 on the market, along with the indirect influence of associated industries. These observations will be integrated into the report.

Market Trends:

Rapid urbanization, along with the growing number of reconstruction and renovation services for old houses and buildings, is primarily driving the global market for reclaimed lumber. Furthermore, the rising environmental consciousness has led to the increasing need for reusing and recycling natural timber. Additionally, the emergence of green construction practices has propelled the adoption of several eco-friendly materials, including reclaimed lumber. Additionally, the growing adoption of reconstructed wood products to produce antique furniture is also bolstering the market growth.
