The increased usage of carbon fiber and composite materials to reduce the overall structural weight of aircraft is driving up demand for "aircraft parts." Aircraft material vendors in the North American region are focusing on supplying sophisticated low-weight materials to major airline firms. For example, Teijin Limited stated in January 2019 that it would sell Tenax carbon fiber and Tenax TPUD, a unidirectional pre-impregnated tape, to Boeing Company. TENAX TPUD is comprised of thermoplastic resin, which has a higher fatigue and impact resistance than traditional materials. Furthermore, Teijin Limited was awarded a contract in January 2019 to sell its TENAX carbon fiber to Bombardier Inc., a Canadian maker of commercial and business planes.
