The use of predictive analytics technique is rising steadily amongst the other child and youth services market trends. Predictive analytics in the context of child welfare is commonly about maltreatment risk levels. The approach works through quantifying the risk and can be used to target the services that are given to children, families, and communities that are most likely to have benefits. For instance, the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services used a predictive analysis model to understand the children who were at risk of placement in congregate care settings. The predictive analytics identified a set of predictors including behavioral and emotional problems of children. This helped the department to design and implement a therapeutic foster care intervention that could be an alternative for congregate care.

The global child and youth services market is segmented by service into foster and guardianship placement services, counseling and information services, social assistance services, children and youth recreational programs, private and state adoption services, others; by age group into infant, child, adolescent, youth; by mode into online, offline.

Major players identified in the child and youth services industry are Children Aid And Family Services, UNICEF (United Nations Children Fund), International Foster Care Organization, International Society For Prevention of Child Abuse And Neglect (ISPCAN), CARE International, Stepstone Family & Youth Services, North East Independent Living Services, Child Welfare League of America, United States Children's Bureau, The European Child Safety Alliance, and Voices of Youth.
