According to the terms of the ACA, insurers are required to spend a certain percentage of a consumers' premium payments on medical claims. The rest should go to administrative costs. The medical-loss ratio is currently set at 80% for individual and small group market insurers and 85% for larger group plans. Individuals and families who are enrolled in the Affordable Care Act should receive rebates by September 30 via either a premium credit, lump-sum check, credit card, or direct debit. This includes those with Arlington health insurance. “For the 2020 reporting year, health insurers provided approximately $1.3 billion in rebates in the individual market, $384 million in the small group market and $291 million in the large group market,” CMS said in an article by fiercehealthcare.com

Rick Thornton, an Arlington health insurance agent said that according to the article above, the breakdown estimate includes approximately 4.8 million people in the individual market and 5 million in the small and large group markets. He also pointed to one sentence in particular that came from the above article. It stated in full, "The $2 billion in rebates is well above the $1.3 billion insurers had to dole out for the 2019 plan year, according to a report from the Kaiser Family Foundation," the article said.
