

The Lowdown launch the world's first digital missed contraceptive pill calculator

Helping to minimise risk of pregnancy for contraceptive pill users including 39% of women who miss their pill at least once a month.

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, January 24, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Lowdown - the world's first review platform for contraception - has launched a one-of-a-kind digital missed pill calculator, aimed at removing the guesswork and minimizing risk of pregnancy for contraceptive pill users, answering the age-old question: "what should I do when I miss my pill?"

The world's first digital Missed Pill Calculator as launched by The Lowdown

According to a 2019 study, 39% of millennial women missed their contraceptive pill at least once a month, with 39% also reporting they do not take the pill at the same time each day, potentially missing their 'safe window'. 21% of these users also attribute missing their pill to stress,

This tool is a game changer for patients and healthcare professionals. Contraceptive pill users will be saved time, stress, and confusion about what to do and where to go if they have missed a pill” something that has become a widespread issue during the pandemic - particularly for women.

The Lowdown has built a world-first algorithm asking users a number of questions dependent on their type and brand of combined or progestogen-only pill. Based on the user's situation (where they are in their packet, how many they've missed, whether they've had sex, etc), they will be presented with 1 of 16 different outcomes. Each outcome is labelled CODE GREEN, CODE AMBER or CODE RED to make it obvious whether the user might be at risk of pregnancy and the urgency of any recommended actions.

Alice Pelton, Founder of The Lowdown says: “We actually couldn't believe that the best way we have of figuring out what to do if you miss a pill is to read a complicated diagram in a patient information leaflet. It was time to innovate! This tool encapsulates everything we want to achieve at The Lowdown: digitising the archaic world of contraception, and giving women and people with vaginas the power to manage it, in their own hands”.

This calculator has been developed by The Lowdown’s medical team; Dr Fran Yarlett, Dr Melanie Davis-Hall and Dr Becky Mawson, using official guidance from the Faculty of Reproductive and Sexual Health (who write the guidelines on contraception in this country).

Dr Melanie Davis-Hall, one of The Lowdown’s Medical Directors, says: “This tool is an absolute game changer for both patients and healthcare professionals. As GPs, we spend so much time searching different guidelines, but now that we’ve brought together multiple complex sources to make one easy-to-use tool - it really will make our job much easier. Contraceptive pill users will be saved time, stress, and confusion about what to do and where to go if they have missed a pill as well”.

Since launching at the end of 2021, the tool has already been used by thousands of women, and received acclaim from medics and pharmacists who themselves find the rules around missed pills confusing. This tool is a huge timesaver and useful resource for doctors, pharmacists and healthcare professionals looking for quick, simple and effective information to help their patients.
